Bats Are Hanging Out in the Library. What Gives?

Bats at the Library is a story told in rhyme by a bat . The bats are bored until one of them hears that a window was left open at the library. The bats are very excited and do lots of fun things in the library like making shadows on the wall using an overhead projector, copying themselves on the copying machine, and of course the highlight of the night, storytime.

Sound Library. BCT has created an online bat sound library which features bat calls recorded from tuneable heterodyne detectors. It is an ongoing project which aims to provide recordings of all UK bat species, illustrating the differences and similarities between different species' calls and how they vary in different habitats. It's a great way to brush up on your ID skills and to help train your ear for species counted in the NBMP surveys.

You'll never forget your first game: the green so green, the presence of heroes past, and togetherness with family and friends, rooting for the home team. But you think humans are the only ones who enjoy America's national pastime? Grab your bat—the other kind—and your mitt, and join these captivating bats as they flutter off to watch their all-stars compete. How about a mothdog? Or some Cricket Jack? In sweeping compositions that transport fans to the rightside-up and upside-down world of bats at play, Brian Lies treats us to a whole new ballgame.

Littlebat, who lives in the attic of the public library, loves to poke his head through a hole in the floor and listen to the librarian read stories to the children. One day he gets so excited by a picture in a book that he loses his grip and plummets into the room below. The children scream and the librarian shoos him away. Littlebat's mother says he must wait for "changes" before going so close to a book again. So Littlebat waits.
