This book is a board book with horizontally split pages so that the food is on the bottom and the animal who eats that food is on the bottom. The child is supposed to match them which provides an extra level of use for this book. Too advanced for Emerson now. But he can identify the animals and the foods.

Food writer John T. Edge explains how the genre views its topic: "Food is essential to life. It 's arguably our nation 's biggest industry. Food, not sex, is our most frequently indulged pleasure. Food—too much, not enough, the wrong kind, the wrong frequency—is one of our society 's greatest causes of disease and death."
